While the United States has long imported oil and other raw materials from the third world, we imported manufactured goods mainly from other rich countries like Canada, European nations and Japan. But recently we crossed an important (56): we now import more manufactured goods from the third world than from other advanced economies.
(57), a majority of our industrial trade is now with countries that are much poorer than we are and that pay their workers much lower wages. For the world economy (58) and especially for poorer nations growing trade between high-wage and low-wage countries is a very good thing. Above all, it offers backward economies their best hope

Reading Comprehension
A new type of television show has taken the public by storm—reality TV. There are many different types of reality TV shows, but they all share two characteristics. First, the people you see on your screen are not professional actors. Second, although the film or video footage is carefully edited or even tweaked before it is aired, the shows are largely unscripted.
These reality TV shows are enormously popular with the public, much to the delight of the television industry. Although opinions differ on why the public is so engrossed in watching ordinary people misbehaving, doing extraordinarily stupid things, or simply interrelating, there is no disagreement about why the television industry is so enamored of the trend. Compared to prevailing television shows, reality TV is cheap to produce. You don't need to hire actors, as most people are eager for the publicity and willing to participate in the shows without pay. Nor is it necessary to hire scriptwriters, or pay for fancy costumes and sets. For television executives, reality TV is a dream come true.

North American black bears are shy animals. (1) They are fearful by nature, and will usually run away if they see or hear people. Because of this, it can be difficult for scientists to learn about these animals. In order to study black bears, researchers in the state of New Jersey, USA, catch bears in traps. Then they sedate the bears with drugs, so they go to sleep and cannot move for a short time. Researchers then measure and weigh the bear, remove a tooth to find out the bear's age, and take blood to test for diseases. From these studies, researchers want to find out how many bears live in New Jersey, how long they live, and how many babies, or cubs, they produce. (2) Several hundred miles to the west, another black bear study is taking place in Minnesota, USA. There, Dr. Lynn Rogers and his team study bears that are completely awake. (3) The bears know the researchers' voices and they are not afraid of the team. They still run away from other people, but with the help of a few grapes or nuts to keep the bears busy, Dr. Rogers can touch the animals to check their hearts, look at their teeth, and change the radio or GPS equipment that the bears wear around their necks. He and his team can also walk or sit with the bears for hours and make videos to learn about the bears' everyday lives. In both places, the main goal is the same—to make sure there is a healthy population of wild black bears. (4)

Should healthcare be free?

¹Who pays for healthcare? The answer varies from country to country. While in some nations it is completely free for all residents, in others you can only see a doctor if you pay. This article will identify three main models of healthcare throughout the world, noting some advantages and disadvantages of each.

²There are several systems within this model, but they all aim to provide free basic healthcare. In some countries, consultations, treatment and medicines are free to all citizens. This may be paid for directly by the government, perhaps funded by the country's valuable natural resources which the government owns. Other countries collect money from citizens through taxes based on their income. Workers pay according to how much they earn and employers also make a contribution. Hospitals and other medical services are then provided and run by the government. There may also be some private medical services that people can choose to buy. The advantage of systems such as these is clear: free basic healthcare for all, regardless of income. However, it is a very expensive system and, as life expectancy and costs rise, many countries are facing either an unsustainable financial burden, or a drop in the quality of services and facilities provided.

³In the private model, healthcare is only available to patients who pay for it and healthcare providers are commercial companies. In wealthier countries, most citizens take out health insurance to cover their potential medical costs. However, not everyone can afford this, and some governments have a scheme which gives financial assistance to those who need urgent medical care but are unable to afford it. In other nations, there is no such safety net, and those who cannot pay simply do not get the healthcare they need, unless they can get help. The disadvantages of this system are obvious: not only are individuals deprived of the medical attention they need, but also the lack of preventative medicine means that infectious diseases can quickly spread. One advantage, however, is that a higher quality of care provision can sometimes be maintained by commercial organizations than by struggling government-funded ones.

⁴In many countries, there is a mix of public and private funding. This system requires all its citizens to take out health insurance. This is deducted from salaries by the employer, who also has to make a contribution for each worker. Citizens are able to choose their healthcare providers, which may be public or private. However, in some systems, private companies are not permitted to make a profit from providing basic healthcare. This model provides more flexibility than either the public or private models, and ensures access to healthcare for all. However, it has been criticized for driving up labor costs, which can lead to unemployment.

⁵This article has examined three models of healthcare provision and some advantages and disadvantages of each. As no system is perfect, several countries are now considering a combination of the models for their national health system. The challenge is to find a system which provides a good level of healthcare to all citizens, but which is also affordable and practical.

		(B) Health insurance is collected through taxes.
		(C) Healthcare providers are run by the government.
		(D) They ensure access to healthcare for everyone.
80.	A	In paragraph 4, why has a mixed system been criticized for driving up labor costs?

		insurance.
